

LLOYD, EVAN (1764 - 1847), Unitarian Baptist minister

Name: Evan Lloyd
Date of birth: 1764
Date of death: 1847
Gender: Male
Occupation: Unitarian Baptist minister
Area of activity: Religion
Author: Robert Thomas Jenkins

Born 21 March 1764 at Nevern; member of Cardigan Baptist church and assistant there to William Williams (1732 - 1799). He served in the militia when the French landed at Fishguard, 1797. He does not seem to have been a General Baptist at the time of the 1799 schism, for in 1801 he was ordained at Ffynnonhenry (D. Jones, Hanes Bed. Deheubarth Cymru, 423, with Yr Ymfynydd, 1847, 93), but soon became an Arminian, and left; his own statement (recorded by his son in Yr Ymfynydd, loc. cit.) says that he refused to sign the Particular Baptist confession as a condition of financial help from the Baptist Fund. He now joined the General Baptist cause of 'Ty Coch' in Cardigan town and (again on his own testimony, loc. cit.) became pastor there and at Zoan (Pembrokeshire) - some have doubted this statement, but there is nothing improbable in it. However, by 1808 he was pastor of the two small General Baptist churches of Wick and Nottage (Glamorganshire), and was there till his death 30 July 1847. His name recurs in the Monthly Repository, as attending (and preaching at) General Baptist assemblies, but also as attending Unitarian assemblies. As the latter were open also to 'our Arian brothers in the ministry,' there is no need to doubt the statement in Lloyd's obituary notice (Yr Ymfynydd, 1847, 48) that he was 'over 60' when he became a declared Unitarian. He seems to have been an amiable and highly-respected man - he was on good terms with the local parson. Counting Lloyd himself, his son, a grandson, and another descendant of his, the pastorate of the two churches was in the hands of this family for 120 years, with a break of only five years; other members of the family figure in the annals of other Unitarian churches. The two chapels are still in use - they, and the chapel at Pant Teg (Carmarthenshire) - see under William Thomas, died 1813), are now the only 'General Baptist' chapels in Wales.
